B.A. in Mass Communication

A student desirous of obtaining a B. A. Mass Communication degree from MBNS will have to complete all six semesters of study

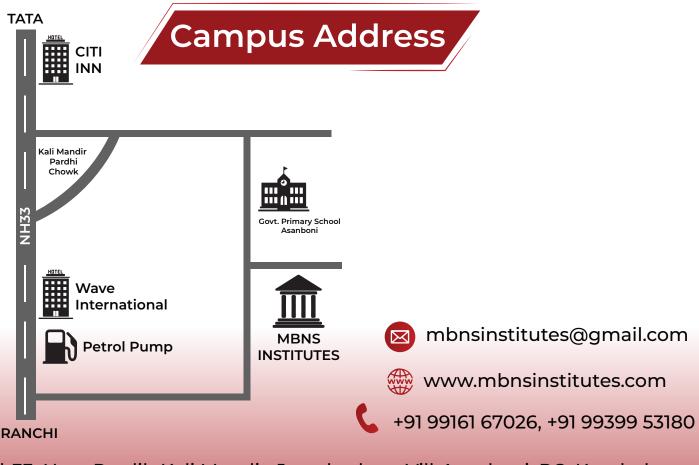

Over the last decade, a large number of colleges and universities have begun to offer communication education at the bachelor's level, particularly, in the field of journalism. This is more as a response to the growth in the media industry rather than as a measure to promote responsible media practices. Still, such mushrooming presents, both a challenge and an opportunity to institutions that understand the power and responsibility of media in society. One of the overall objectives of this program in MBNS is to promote well - being in society through meaningful media practices.

Specifically, the objectives of this program are as follows :

To provide a strong foundation in news media practices across different media.

To promote an understanding of news media and their role in society.

To promote depth in media education by laying a strong foundation in the study of arts.
